The novel follows Barney Panofsky, a wealthy and successful television producer in his late sixties. Barney is a larger-than-life character, full of contradictions and complexities. He's a brilliant and successful businessman, but he's also a deeply flawed and often lonely man. He's a devoted husband and father, but he's also a serial philanderer. He's a generous and compassionate man, but he's also capable of great cruelty.

and compassion. The novel is also a love letter to Montreal, the city where Richler grew up and lived for many years.
