Sinding's artwork is often characterized by its vibrant colors, bold brushstrokes, and surreal imagery. She draws inspiration from a wide range of sources, including nature, mythology, and her own personal experiences. Her work often explores themes of identity, sexuality, and the human condition.

One of the most striking things about Sinding's work is her use of color. She often uses bright, contrasting colors to create a sense of energy and excitement. Her brushstrokes are also very expressive, and she often uses them to create a sense of movement and fluidity in her paintings.

In addition to her paintings, Sinding also creates sculptures, installations, and multimedia works. Her sculptures are often made from found objects, and she often uses them to create a sense of playfulness and whimsy. Her installations are often site-specific, and she uses them to create a unique and immersive experience for viewers.

Sinding's work has been praised by critics for its originality, beauty, and emotional power. She has been compared to such renowned artists as Frida Kahlo, Jackson Pollock, and Pablo Picasso. However, Sinding is quick to point out that she is her own artist, and that she does not want to be compared to anyone else.

Sinding is a true visionary, and her artwork is a reflection of her unique perspective on the world. Her work is inspiring, thought-provoking, and ultimately uplifting. She is a role model for artists and non-artists alike, and her work will continue to inspire people for generations to come.
